

in the district. "I suppose if I felt I was hanging on by my finger nails, I would go out and do and work the district, but I have this Judiciary thing and, unless I'm misreading the situation very badly, my work is higher on the priority list than going back to the district." He said the man running against him is a builder who is organizing everyone connected with the building industry and saying that "we need our interests represented in Washington." "It's a very narrow view." " He says his opponent plus one other insignificant opponent should get one-third of the vote.

He said that on a typical trip home to the district he would visit one school, one group of "institutional administrators" by which he meant city officials, Chamber of Commerce, something like that. He said that he cannot hit the service clubs too much because they meet during the week. He said he would go to one or two political things and that as the campaign heated up, the political would take a higher percentage of his time.

He says September is fine and to check with Pat Rowland.
