

2/1 not sent to Farrow
FARROW

✓

Interview with E.S. Farrow,
Assistant Production Manager

1/17/40

A few months before Mr. Eastman died Karl Compton, who succeeded Dr. Maclaurin as President of M.I.T., came to Rochester for the first time. Mr. Lovejoy, Mr. Lane, and Mr. Farrow had breakfast with Dr. Compton and took him over to Mr. Eastman's house.

Mr. Eastman was feeling low in spirits and did not rise for his guests. As the small group sat in the library Dr. Compton, although he felt a bit nervous in the presence of the man to whom M.I.T. owed so much, tried to tell Mr. Eastman about the new things they had there--the Eastman Physical Laboratory, for example. Mr. Eastman did not prolong the conversation and suggested its closing by remarking that Dr. Compton probably had a long day ahead and he probably wanted to see Kodak Park. So they all started to leave. As they were going out Mr. Eastman called "President Compton!" They turned back and Mr. Eastman continued "You know, 'Technology' is particularly fortunate in having you as its head!" Dr. Compton naturally asked "Why is that?" "Because of your youth" replied Mr. Eastman wistfully. Later they all remarked upon this comment and upon the feeling of the weight of years that undoubtedly prompted Mr. Eastman to make it.

Mr. Farrow recalls also an incident indicating how Mr. Eastman could keep silent when almost any other person might have been expected to say something. During promenade in a Kilbourn Hall concert Mrs. Farrow and he walked in the theater corridor and stood beneath a picture of Mr. Eastman which hung on the wall. While they were looking Mr. Farrow saw Mr. Eastman come up quietly and stand beside Mrs. Farrow. Entirely unaware that he was there she remarked "Isn't that a fine likeness of Mr. Eastman? It's really wonderful!" Neither of them ever knew whether Mr. Eastman was amused or what his thoughts were for he had moved on before they had a chance to inquire.

Farrow, E. S.

- 2 -

FRANCIS 100
BOND

Farrow, E. S.

FARROW

Interview with E.S. Farrow,
Assistant Production Manager

1/ 17 / 4 0

A few months before Mr. Eastman died Karl Compton, who succeeded Dr. Maclaurin as President of M.I.T., came to Rochester for the first time. Mr. Lovejoy, Mr. Lane, and Mr. Farrow had breakfast with Dr. Compton and took him over to Mr. Eastman's house.

Mr. Eastman was feeling low in spirits and did not rise for his guests. As the small group sat in the library Dr. Compton, although he felt a bit nervous in the presence of the man to whom M.I.T. owed so much, tried to tell Mr. Eastman about the new things they had there--the Eastman Physical Laboratory, for example. Mr. Eastman did not prolong the conversation and suggested its closing by remarking that Dr. Compton probably had a long day ahead and he probably wanted to see Kodak Park. So they all started to leave. As they were going out Mr. Eastman called "President Compton!" They turned back and Mr. Eastman continued "You know, 'Technology' is particularly fortunate in having you as its head!" Dr. Compton naturally asked "Why is that?" "Because of your youth" replied Mr. Eastman wistfully. Later they all remarked upon this comment and upon the feeling of the weight of years that undoubtedly prompted Mr. Eastman to make it.

Mr. Farrow recalls also an incident indicating how Mr. Eastman could keep silent when almost any other person might have been expected to say something. During promenade in a Kilbourn Hall concert Mrs. Farrow and he walked in the theater corridor and stood beneath a picture of Mr. Eastman which hung on the wall. While they were looking Mr. Farrow saw Mr. Eastman come up quietly and stand beside Mrs. Farrow. Entirely unaware that he was there she remarked "Isn't that a fine likeness of Mr. Eastman? It's really wonderful!" Neither of them ever knew whether Mr. Eastman was amused or what his thoughts were for he had moved on before they had a chance to inquire.

- 2 -

Farrow, E. S.