

✓

STORER

Mrs. Charles N. Storer,
74 Tremont Street,
Main 5 2 3 8 -W

1 / 1 5 / 4 0

(Wife of Boyhood Acquaintance)

(Constructed from Mrs. Storer's Telephone Conversation
With Colonel Solbert)

According to Mrs. Storer, Mr. Eastman's well-known taciturnity existed even in his youth. She averred "George Eastman wouldn't have a great deal to say for himself even when he was a boy." George Eastman also had inventive genius and a business sense while still in his teens as evidenced by the following story.

Charles Storer, when a youngster, liked puzzles and he admired George Eastman for his mechanical ingenuity in constructing them. One puzzle which George constructed was made from a wire knitting needle, bending it into three links and getting the one into the others. The trick then consisted of untangling the links. When Charles saw this he very much wanted to have it and tried to wheedle George into giving it to him. However, there was "nothing doing" in the way of a gift so far as George was concerned in this case. Having the instincts of a business man even at the early age of 16 he sold the puzzle to Mr. Storer for ten cents.

Storer, Mrs. Charles N.

Storer

✓

Mr. Charles N. Storer,
74 Tremont Street,
Main 5 2 3 8 -W

1 / 1 5 / 4 0

(Wife of Boyhood Acquaintance)

(Constructed from Mrs. Storer's Telephone Conversation
With Colonel Solbert)

According to Mrs. Storer, Mr. Eastman's well-known taciturnity existed even in his youth. She averred "George Eastman wouldn't have a great deal to say for himself even when he was a boy." George Eastman also had inventive genius and a business sense while still in his teens as evidenced by the following story.

Charles Storer, when a youngster, liked puzzles and he admired George Eastman for his mechanical ingenuity in constructing them. One puzzle which George constructed was made from a wire knitting needle, bending it into three links and getting the one into the other. The trick then consisted of untangling the links. When Charles saw this he very much wanted to have it and tried to wheedle George into giving it to him. However, there was "nothing doing" in the way of a gift so far as George was concerned in this case. Having the instincts of a business man even at the early age of 16 he sold the puzzle to Mr. Storer for ten cents.

Storer, Mrs. Charles N.